

March 28, 2016

Williamson County Resident Kim Little Announces Candidacy for School Board

Kim Little formally announced her candidacy for Williamson County school board in District 3 on March 28.

Little has been a Williamson County resident and an involved parent in District 3 for 14 years. Her two youngest children completed their Williamson County Schools careers this spring, which she said has opened the door for her to find new ways to contribute to the district and its students.

Little has worked with educators for many years in multiple roles as a parent and as a curriculum advisor for Brentwood-based Ramsey Solutions since 2007.

“Speaking with educators daily gives me the inside connection to not only hear what they have to say, but listen to their needs and desires for their classrooms. Their love for the students is very obvious, and I am convinced that teachers are the key to our children being successful,” Little said.

“Children have to discover their passion at an early age and become the best they can be. When a child works passionately within their areas of interest, success follows,” she added.

“Kim Little has served on our team for more than eight years. Time and time again she has proven to have a servant heart full of integrity. I am proud to have her on our team and to call her friend,” said Dave Ramsey, CEO of Ramsey Solutions.

For the past several years, Little also has been a Tennessee state licensed foster parent. She has hosted and nurtured almost 30 children in her home during this time.

“I have seen firsthand children who have experienced things that no human should ever have to endure, as well as those with learning issues that go unaddressed. My desire is to do everything possible to meet their needs so that every child in our county will love to go to school and love being successful,” she said.

“Kim has an understanding of, and has proven to be, an advocate for at-risk children within the school system. She would make an immediate impact on Williamson County and would be a true asset as a school board member. Kim has the drive, compassion and knowledge to make a difference within her community and the education system,” said Abby Roark, director of foster care at Camelot MidSouth.

For the past nine years, Little has been very involved in her children’s sports in the Williamson County Schools and in providing assistance as needed.

“I have had the privilege of coaching Kim’s children the past nine seasons and over the years Kim has been a very dedicated member of our wrestling community. Even before her children were in the high school wrestling program, she was a very involved and dedicated parent with the youth program as well. Kim has been in charge of a lot of different tasks relating to the team and has always done a fantastic job with all of them,” said Jared Grindstaff, wrestling coach, HIS.

“Kim’s youngest son is graduating this year, and I have no doubt Kim will be successful with her next adventure that she takes on. Wrestling is something that is hard to get out of your system but although she is moving on from our program, I know if I ever need anything I can contact her and can always count on her to help us out. We can’t thank her enough for all her hard work and dedication to our program over the past nine years,” he added.

For more information or to arrange an interview, email her at Kim.Little@daveramsey.com.